Title

Predictable Treatment Outcomes with Digital Diagnostics

Abstract

The comprehensive treatment of patients with multiple restorative problems can be a real challenge in daily clinical practice. Even more if the patient expectations are high, and esthetics is of pronounced relevance.

In order to coordinate the treatment sequences and for predictable, stable long-term outcomes, a structured approach to treatment planning and execution is of utmost importance. In this lecture the Geneva approach in treatment planning, pre-treatment diagnostics and communication, and definition of treatment goals using digital technologies and their predictable translation into clinics will be presented.

Learning Objectives

1. Learn to apply a structured step-by-step approach for patient case analysis.
2. Understand the importance of pre-treatment diagnostics, and learn how digital technologies can improve the efficiency and communication of diagnostics – specifically in multi-disciplinary treatments.
3. Learn how to predictably translate this goal into the clinics.
